

Jerry Eisinger is the writer-producer of the new feature-length film The Whisper Home (www.TheWhisperHome.com). He is a veteran of film and television for over 15 years, working both in front of and behind the camera.

As an actor, Jerry appeared in many independent films, television programs, theater productions, commercials, industrials and print ads. He recently returned from The Tennessee Williams Festival where he was cast as the role of Mitch in Streetcar named Desire.

Jerry's first feature-film, Stealing God, won the Secret City Film Festival in 2006 and was distributed through Passion River Films early in 2007. He hosted two radio programs about the business of independent filmmaking, interviewing a wide range of guest from celebrities to film students. He also served on the board of TipToe, an organization in the southeast dedicated to helping new talent showcase their work.

In television, Jerry hosted This Week for PBS in Florida. For nearly three years, he hosted to a national audience for Jewelry Television and Shop-At-Home. He was also a General Assignment Reporter for Fox 35 in Orlando.

His career began in Michigan as a radio news reporter. But when he transitioned to Orlando, Florida, he gained the desire to work more in entertainment while hosting shows for Universal Studios and Disney/MGM Studios. That's when Jerry started producing a series of film shorts leading to feature films. Because of his wide range of experiences in the industry, Jerry is excited to helping others reach their goals in the entertainment field.
